Are you living in fear of your partner and need to leave but are scared about leaving pets behind?

Refs for Pets
can help!

Animals can be used in abusive relationships in the following ways:

- Your partner may threaten to hurt or kill your pet if you behave in certain ways or if you leave the relationship
- Your partner may neglect or refuse to look after your pet if you leave it behind as a way to keep you in a relationship
- Once you have left, your partner may threaten to hurt your pet as a way to make you go back.

If you fear for your animal's safety and this is stopping you from leaving a relationship there is a service in Nottingham that can help.

Who can we help?

Any woman leaving or thinking of leaving an abusive relationship.

How can we help?

We can find a temporary home for your pets whilst you are living in temporary accommodation. This might include:

- Staying in a refuge
- Living in a hostel
- Staying in Bed and Breakfast
- Living with family or friends
- Any other form of temporary accommodation you are staying in to escape domestic violence.

What you need to do:

If you are thinking about leaving you might want to talk it through with a support worker from Women's Aid - contact the helpline for help and safety advice.

If you are leaving an abusive relationship and are worried about the safety of your animals try and take your pets with you and leave them with a family or friend.

Contact Refs for Pets who will then arrange for your animals to be fostered. If you have fled in an emergency and left your pets behind it may be possible for Refs for Pets to collect your animals with the help of a police escort.
